Health, Money and Fear - Paul Hochfield

Produced by an emergency physician (Paul Hochfield), "Health, Money and Fear" answers three questions about our broken health care non-system. Why does it cost so much? What does it say about us? What can we do about it? While Congress is more focused on the symptom, lack of Universal Coverage, they are ignoring the underlying problem. COST. Unless they address the perverse incentives that drive up cost, the "reform" we are going to get will be more government subsidies so the insurance industry can continue to thrive being central to a dysfunctional health care system that is better at producing profits than health. The elements of the solution must address the elements of the problem: technology, the fear of liability, mass marketing of prescription drugs, the profit motive, chaos in medical records, unrealistic expectations, and the multitude of insurance companies that add substantially to cost without contributing anything to health.
